Figure 1. Shows changes in the proportion of professionally educated social work professional in all social workers

2.2 Changes in gender and age of social work professional

The development of social work is attached importance to by the central and local governments, and cultivating and developing social work professional has become an important task of government work. Through the unremitting efforts of all stratum, social work professional have continued to grow and develop. By 2018, there have been more than 2 million in the number of social workers. More and more people have joined into social work professional, among which the proportion of female social workers has also shown a steady increase. There was a significant increase in 2011, from 15.20% of the national social workers in 2010 to 37.70% in 2011. More and more female social workers joined, promoting more effective social work services and providing women with a variety of career choices.

The age structure of social workers has changed to some extent. It can be observed that the largest number of social workers is those aged 36-45 in chart 4, followed by those under 35 who are engaged in social work. However, the proportion of social workers in these two age groups in national social workers has dropped year by year, while the proportion of social workers aged 46-55 and over 56 has increased year by year, indicating that the proportion of young social workers entering the field is decreasing. On the one hand, in actual work, the professionalization of social work professions is low, and social awareness of social work is insufficient. As a result, the professional satisfaction of social workers at work is not guaranteed. On the other hand, the Master of Social Work does not have a high degree of recognition of the social work profession, and the current overall social recognition of social work is low. The factors such as lack of post, low salary etc. affect social workers career choice. The students majored in social lack confidence in the development prospects of the social work industry. They plan social work careers as "transitional" jobs, or engage in other industries after graduation, which is a great loss to the construction of the social work professional team.

2.3 There is still a gap in the total number of social workers and the number of professional
In some countries with better development of social work professional, such as the United States, Japan and Canada, the proportion of professional social workers in the total population is 2%, 5% and 2.2% respectively. In Hong Kong, registered social workers account for 1.7% of the total population. According to the statistics of the Ministry of Civil Affairs, China Mainland professional social workers accounted for 0.31‰ of the total population by the end of 2018. The number is far less than that of developed countries and regions. The demand of social workers in China cannot meet the need. Social work professional is the core of promoting social work, and social work plays an effective role in helping people in difficulties. Therefore, the shortage of social work professional needs to be paid more attention to.

2.4 The rationality of the regional structure of social work professional needs to be improved
There is an unreasonable regional structure in the distribution of social work professional. By the end of 2018, nearly 300,000 social workers with junior and intermediate professional titles had been added nationwide. Those social workers are concentrated in the eastern and southern regions, there are more than 80,000 social workers with professional title in Guangdong, more than 50,000 in Jiangsu, more than 40,000 in Zhejiang, and more than 20,000 in Beijing, Shanghai, and Shandong. However, the remote areas of the west lack social work professional cannot be compared with the developed eastern regions.

Social work is still a new thing in the central and western regions, and it is even more unfamiliar in remote ethnic areas. One of the causes is the leaders of the local government in the western region are skeptical of social workers, lack of cooperation in actual work contacts, and have a low understanding of the professional services of social workers in the remote and poor areas.

3. Analysis of factors affecting policy effects
3.1 The professional allocation of social workers is unreasonable, and professional shortage and surplus coexist
As a new profession, social work is still in the development stage in China, thus there will be a shortage of social work professional, and the degree of specialization of social work professional needs to be improved. The part of the present social workers is composed of transferred administrative staff and community workers, without professional social work training, professional are lack in the process of social work services. The shortage of social work professional is more obvious in the remote district. Due to the poor overall environment of the remote district, the places and facilities for social workers to carry out professional services are also in a state of scarcity, so professional social workers who persist in service for a long time are very scarce. Secondly, because the economic development in remote areas is relatively backward, it is difficult to attract social workers to stay in the remote districts for development. However, a large number of social work professional graduate from colleges and universities every year, and the state attaches great importance to the cultivation of social work professional, but social work professional are not matched to the corresponding social jobs reasonably. Social work college students usually do not choose social work as their lifelong career after graduation, so the shortage and surplus of social work professional are urgent problems to be solved.
Labor Economy

3.2 There are lower professional awareness and social recognition to social worker in the society

The professionalization process of social work lags behind professional education, so social recognition is relatively low. On one hand the current social work as a profession in China is still a new thing, the slow development of social work in the central region and the north-west region, social work is still a little-known profession, and the process of professionalization of social work is relatively slow; On the other hand, the pace of professional education in social work has been accelerating. Since 2012, the first batch of master's degree education in social work has been carried out in China. Some schools have obtained doctoral qualifications in social work, and the professional education of social work professional has far exceeded professionalism. In the areas where social workers provide services, such as judicial correction, employment services, medical and health care, youth affairs, women's rights protection, etc., most people still do not understand its connotation, Even if social workers themselves don't understand social work before coming into the industry, there are problems such as low recognition and insufficient support for the role of social work professional, which affects the professional ability and service effect of social work professional.

3.3 The social worker professional salary system is not perfect, and the organization management capabilities need to be improved

The fundamental reason that affects the professional satisfaction of social work professional is the lack of a systematic social work wage system, which does not match the development of social work in the new era.

The wage level of social workers has increased compared with previous years, but it is not relatively equal to the contributions of social workers and lacks an effective incentive mechanism. It is relatively difficult to measure quantitatively and qualitatively of social work service. Social work in Guangdong Province has been developing well, and the development of social work professional is at the forefront of the country. The Guangdong Provincial Government has continuously expanded its investment in purchasing social work services, with a cumulative investment of nearly 6 billion yuan. However, there are still some problems, such as low salary, bottleneck of development and slow career promotion. According to a survey conducted by the Civil Affairs Department of Guangdong Province in 2018, 51.9% of social workers choose to leave social work because their income has not reached their satisfaction. Jiaxing City adopts the "government purchase service", but the quality of service is ignored in the assessment, it is unable to achieve incentives for social work professional. The actual assessment of government purchases of services fails to highlight the linkage between the salaries of social work professional and their work abilities, and cannot actually solve the salary incentive measures, which is not conducive to the stable development of social work professional.

The information-based social work has completely changed the way farmers obtain social helping resources, and gradually make up for the gap with urban social work. The invisible value is reflected in the development process of rural social work and plays a fundamental role. Urban social work professional and rural social work professional share work experience through the Internet link, which would improve the service scope of social work professional and expands service area.

4.1.3 A new model of social workers' development is innovated by informatization
Social work service agencies and government departments could obtain new service and management ideas from social work informatization, and explore new models for the construction of social work professional team and industry development. The application of informatization can make social work service agencies more convenient and timely, and improve service efficiency; informatization can help government departments to supervise social work service agencies and service items, and can make government decisions more convincing. Only by paying more attention and improving the treatment of social work professional can they retain social work professional and develop local social work professional in remote areas or underdeveloped areas, and it is necessary to further improve the system to support the implementation of the policy of social work professional.

The propaganda department and newspaper media still have a great influence on public opinion. The power of traditional media should be given full play to. Through television and radio publicity, make all people have the opportunity to understand the social work profession, and further enhance the awareness of social work professional team. The construction of legal systems related to social work is relatively scarce, and a series of legal systems need to be improved. The law is a weapon for social work professional to protect their rights and interests. Social work professional's low wages and benefits, poor working environment and conditions, and low social status would all affect the expression of their own value. It is necessary to establish and improve social workers' salary regulation to protect their rights.
